Fattah Jr. sues IRS: 'I'm trying to clear my name'

Apology. Two years after the IRS raided his apartment, Chaka Fattah Jr. is suing for $10 million in damages and an apology.

Chaka Fattah Jr. is currently filing a lawsuit against the federal government over a life-changing IRS raid of his former apartment that ruined his reputation and career, he claims.

"I haven't been able to find virtually any new clients since that time," said Fattah Jr., son of U.S. Rep. Chaka Fattah and head of 259 Consulting. "This has damaged my credit; this has damaged by ability to handle any financial matter."

The raid on Fattah's apartment took place in the early morning hours of Feb. 29, 2012. An Inquirer photographer got pictures of investigators leaving the Ritz after the raid — and Fattah believes that proves that a federal employee tipped off the media.

Quoted

"I'm hopeful that a court-ordered formal apology and monetary judgment will help clear my name and go a long way toward restoring my professional reputation."

Fattah Jr.

"It's 6:30 on a cold Wednesday morning in February. How did they know that it was going to happen?" Fattah said.

According to reports, the raid was focused on Fattah's job working for an entity linked with Delaware Valley High Schools. That contract was terminated directly as a result of the raid, Fattah said, depriving him of income.

"I worked very hard to build up my business," Fattah said. "There have been no charges to date. I have never been audited. I have not been assessed any additional taxes. It's more than two years later and any authority for them to do this doesn't include them having approval to leak the existence of an investigation to the media."

An IRS spokesman did not respond to requests for comment.

Court. Teachers union fights seniority loss

The public school teacher's union doesn't want to give up its seniority.

Jerry Jordan, union president, called the actions, "unwarranted and unjustified."

Heavy metal. Two public employees caught stealing scrap

City officials caught two city employees with their hands in the dumpster.

A locksmith for the School District of Philadelphia and a Streets Department employee both with more than 20 years of service were caught separately stealing and reselling pieces of city-owned scrap metal.

City Controller Alan Butkovitz said the locksmith, who drove a district-issued vehicle to haul the scrap metal to the recycler while he was on the clock, profited $1,747 over two years.

"This employee was storing scrap metal that was left from various jobs," Butkovitz said, "and taking it to the recycler and pocketing the money."

The Streets Department worker, who was caught on surveillance video lifting pieces from public property, made $850 over four months.

"The items were large enough that the employee had to use a forklift to transfer the metal through the city-owned facility and into his personal trailer," Butkovitz said.

He declined to name the workers, however, he did say the two departments will act swiftly.

The rules

According to the City's Charter, all city-owned property must be disposed of through the city's Procurement Department.

- The city has contracts in place with area recyclers.

Fort Hood. Army says shooter showed no suicidal tendencies

The soldier suspected of shooting dead three people before killing himself at the Fort Hood Army base in Texas was under psychiatric care, but showed no signs of violence or suicidal tendencies, a U.S. official said on Thursday.

No motive was given for the rampage, which also left 16 wounded, in what was the second mass shooting at the base in five years, raising questions about security at U.S. military posts. Officials have so far ruled out terrorism.

The gunman, who had been treated for depression and anxiety, was yet to be officially named, but security officials said preliminary information identified him as 34-year-old Ivan Lopez.

U.S. Army Secretary John McHugh said the soldier, who joined the service in 2008, had served two tours of duty abroad, including four months in Iraq in 2011. He had no direct involvement in combat and had not been wounded.

McHugh said Lopez and his wife were from Puerto Rico and that he had served in the Puerto Rican national guard before joining the U.S. Army. REUTERS

Quoted

"He was undergoing a variety of treatment and diagnoses for mental health conditions, ranging from depression to anxiety to some sleep disturbance. He was prescribed a number of drugs to address those, including Ambien." U.S. Army Secretary John McHugh

VLADIMIR PUTIN'S POLL VAULT

Scarcely was the news out before the Kremlin was unfurling banners, hiring a deejay and ordering pizzas for the party. At least that is what I imagine. After all, it's a good day when the American public declares your leader not the worst person ever.

It sounds like an April Fools' prank, but a new poll from Quinnipiac University found that most Americans do not think Vladimir Putin is as bad as Hitler. Granted it was close, with just 51 percent nixing the Putin-Hitler equivalency, and almost a quarter endorsing it. And, in a sad comment on the state of education, one in five said they don't know enough about World War II to have an opinion.

Still, this must be a relief to the Russian president. His crew steamed into Ukraine, copped the Crimean peninsula like a dropped wallet and, aside from some economic harrumphing from the international community, that was pretty much it.

Quoted

But back to this Hitler thing. Despite the vote in Putin's favor, it's probably not good to have your name booted around in such a poll.

But back to this Hitler thing. Despite the vote in Putin's favor, it's probably not good to have your name booted around in such a poll. Far better for people to be voting on things like, "Who is funnier: Chelsea Handler or Putin?" Or maybe, "Putin or Pushkin: Pick your Russian dream date!" Or even, "You only have one gulag. Who do you send: Putin or Carrot Top?"

Those are the sort of fun-loving polls the Red Square gang could really celebrate, especially considering that even on a good day their leader bears a resemblance to a Bond villain. He also looks a bit like the evil, bald twin of actor Daniel Craig, who plays Bond. Go figure.

Then again, maybe Putin's friends are not at all encouraged by any of this news. His pals may be sorely disappointed that he has (at least for the time being) stopped before rolling up half of Ukraine. Perhaps they are sitting around scarfing herring casseroles, swilling vodka and congratulating themselves on the Crimea gambit, but on the way home saying, "You know if Vladimir would just toughen up a bit, then we'd really have a leader!"

New poll. Voters cool to Christie and warm to Warren from Mass.

New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie fell to ninth place from his top spot among favored U.S. politicians after a scandal over traffic lane closures on the George Washington Bridge, according to a Quinnipiac University ranking released on Thursday.

The poll measuring Americans' sentiment toward political leaders was taken last week as the well-known Republican, who is often mentioned as a possible 2016 U.S. presidential contender, released an internal investigation two months after the lane shutdown popularly referred to as "Bridgegate" came to light.

Christie lost the No. 1 spot to populist Sen. Elizabeth Warren, a Democrat from Massachusetts, in Quinnipiac's "National Thermometer" poll.

Former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, also a Democrat, came in second. REUTERS

US built secret 'Cuban Twitter' to foment unrest

Legal. The GAO reviewed the project and found it did not violate U.S. law, according to the AP.

A U.S. agency created a "Cuban Twitter" to undermine Cuba's communist government and get around its strict Internet prohibitions, using secret shell companies financed through foreign banks, The Associated Press reported on Thursday.

The two-year project drew 40,000 users who did not know the network was devised by a U.S. agency and designed to push them toward political dissent, according to the AP. They did not know their personal information was being gathered. The report identified the U.S. Agency for International Development, which delivers aid to the world's poor, as being behind the project.

The communications network was called "ZunZuneo," Cuban slang for a hummingbird's tweet, and the AP said its goal was to build a young audience.

The plan for the social network was to draw in a certain number of users with messages on sports, music and other noncontroversial topics. Then the operators would introduce political content to try to inspire spontaneous demonstrations, the AP reported. One USAID document cited by the AP said the goal was to "renegotiate the balance of power between the state and society."

It was not clear if the program was illegal but a statement from USAID spokesman Matt Herrick said the project was reviewed in 2013 by the Government Accounting Office and found to be consistent with U.S. law. REUTERS

Quoted

"The purpose of the ZunZuneo project was to create a platform for Cubans to speak freely among themselves, period." Herrick said in a statement.

Medicare for same-sex married couples

The Obama administration announced on Thursday that same-sex married couples can qualify for Medicare hospital and physician benefits for the first time.

The decision, coming after a 2013 U.S. Supreme Court ruling that struck down a federal ban against same-sex marriage, allows the Social Security Administration to determine the eligibility of married gay applicants to Medicare, the government's health care program for the elderly and the disabled.

"We are working together with SSA to process these requests in a timely manner to ensure all beneficiaries, regardless of sexual orientation, are treated fairly under the law," U.S. Health and Human Services Secretary Kathleen Sebelius said. REUTERS

GM. Despite hurdles, Delphi's liability in recall could be tested

Delphi Automotive's name does not appear on the outside of the 2.6 million vehicles recalled by General Motors Co. since February, but the company is getting drawn into a mounting wave of litigation for its role in producing the faulty ignition switch that prompted the recalls.

Plaintiffs have now named Delphi, one of the largest auto parts suppliers in the world, in at least two lawsuits stemming from the recall. One was filed by a former Delphi employee whose daughter was killed in a 2013 crash involving a recalled 2006 Chevy Cobalt, the other by customers who claim the ignition problems caused their cars to lose value.

Delphi's legal exposure may hinge on how much control it had over decisions involving the design of the switch, and the terms of its four-year bankruptcy, which ended in 2009.

While Delphi made the part, GM set the specifications and ultimately approved its use, according to documents from civil litigation and congressional investigations.

Delphi spokeswoman Claudia Tapia declined to comment, except to say that the company was "working cooperatively with GM on this matter." The company has not yet filed responses to the two lawsuits. REUTERS

GM has linked the defect to 13 deaths and has apologized for how it handled the recall and said it is committed to helping affected customers.

Native American tribe may seek to hunt bison inside Yellowstone

The Nez Perce tribe once hunted bison in what is now Yellowstone National Park, and some tribal leaders want to revive the practice, which ended with Western settlement and the near total extermination of the once-vast U.S. bison herds. Today, remnants of the bison, or buffalo, herds still roam the grasslands and river valleys of Yellowstone, a huge park that covers parts of Wyoming, Montana and Idaho. The park lands, in which hunting is illegal, once made up a key segment of the Idaho tribe's traditional hunting grounds, and some Nez Perce leaders say they should again be able to hunt buffalo inside the park. REUTERS / GETTY IMAGES

US patent lobby

Apple and others form 'go slow' group

Major U.S. companies including Ford, Apple and Pfizer have formed a lobbying group aimed at pushing back at some changes to the patent system members of Congress have proposed, saying these measures would hinder protection of valuable inventions.

The group is concerned about pending legislation aimed at fighting so-called patent assertion entities (PAEs), companies which produce nothing but instead buy up patents and then attempt to extract licensing fees or sue for infringement.

Called the Partnership for American Innovation, the group warned that steps to stop the PAEs could also hurt truly innovative companies. REUTERS

U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry waves next to U.S. Ambassador to Israel Daniel Shapiro before boarding a plane at Ben Gurion Airport after a meeting with Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu on April 1. / GETTY IMAGES

US hopes hit an arid reality in peace talks

No love. The two sides have regularly accused each other of failing to take the process seriously.

From the moment Middle East peace talks resumed last July, it always looked as if U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry was more eager to strike a deal than either the Israelis or Palestinians.

While the two old foes have said repeatedly that they want to talk, neither side has looked remotely ready to make the sort of concessions that might eventually lead to peace.

When the U.S.-led negotiations hit major turbulence this week, it was not about core issues that have fueled the decades-old conflict. Instead, the dispute focused on how to maintain the arid discussions and avoid being blamed for failure.

Kerry, who kicked off this latest pursuit of peace eight months ago with typical enthusiasm, has indicated that he will play a less prominent role should the process continue, revealing in recent days his growing frustrations.

"In the end, my friends, as all of you know, you can push, you can nudge, but the parties themselves have to make fundamental decisions and compromises. The leaders have to lead," he said during a visit to Algiers on Thursday.

Kerry flew for one night to Jerusalem to try to find a way forward toward the seemingly elusive goal of securing a sovereign Palestinian state.

Believing a convoluted, three-way deal was in the offing, both Kerry and Israel were stunned the following day when Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas theatrically signed 15 international treaties live on television. REUTERS

The latest crisis started last weekend when the Israelis failed to fulfill their commitment to release a batch of 26 Palestinian prisoners, saying they first needed guarantees that talks would continue beyond an initial April deadline.

Russia recalls military representative in rebuke to NATO

Russia has recalled its top military representative to NATO for consultations, Russian news agencies reported on Thursday, widening the rift between Moscow and the Western alliance over Moscow's annexation of Crimea region.

The recall to Moscow of Gen. Valery Yevnevich, a form of diplomatic protest, follows a decision by NATO this week to suspend cooperation with Russia in response to occupation of Crimea Peninsula. REUTERS

Late-night. Host David Letterman to retire from CBS in about a year

Comedian and veteran late-night television host David Letterman will retire as star of "The Late Show" on CBS in 2015, when his latest contract expires, he said during the taping of his show in New York on Thursday, the network announced.

Letterman, 66, began hosting the show on CBS in August 1993, after leaving the rival NBC network, where he had hosted the "Late Night with David Letterman" show for many years. REUTERS

Succession

News of David Letterman's plans to retire came nearly two months after Jay Leno bid farewell as host of NBC's "The Tonight Show."

- It's a job Leno assumed in 1992 in a highly publicized succession of Johnny Carson that led to Letterman's defection from NBC.

SOPHIE TURNER

"I feel like she'd kill a therapist," says Sophie Turner of her "Game of Thrones" character.

SANSA STARK NEEDS TO HEAR A GOOD JOKE

After giving fans time to grieve for those who were brutally slain at the end of Season 3, "Game of Thrones" is back for another round. Actress Sophie Turner, who plays Sansa Stark, says that fans should expect more of the same: more blood, more trauma and more lies as the fight for the Iron Throne continues.

You're a Lannister now. How does that feel?
Sansa Lannister. Great.

Really?
No! It's fun for me because I get to spend more time with Peter (Dinklage), but for Sansa, it kind of sucks because these are the people who killed her father.

Have you read all the books?
I only read my chapters. I flick through the books and mark them down.

The third one is a really difficult read — have you read it?

I'm afraid not.
I don't blame you. The writing is tiny. I'm always Wikipedia-ing it to get a sense of what's going to happen. More misery, that's what's going to happen.

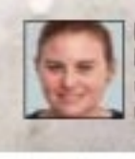
Have you ever searched for yourself on Wikipedia?
I would never do that. Although I did do that once to prove that I was 16 when I was on a train and wanted a child ticket. That was the first and the only time I ever did that, by the way.

Sansa always looks so depressed. Does that not make you sad?
At first I couldn't master how to cry and draw that emotion so I just used my personal life. My grandma was really ill at the time and so I started thinking about her, but it just got me really down. And then I realized that you actually have to act and pretend you're in the situation.

So how do you do it now if you can't think of your grandma?
Her story is so sad that every time something s—y happens, I feel like crying anyway. I'm a broken woman.

What would she need to genuinely belly laugh?
Someone should fart because that's undeniably funny. If Joffrey farted on the Iron Throne!

Joffrey is as repulsive and disturbing as ever — don't you sometimes want to punch him?
I do. He's so creepy. But you love to hate him.



ROMINA McGUINNESS
romina.mcguinness@metro.lu

Bonus question

Things have got to be pretty messed up in Sansa's head. What would happen if she went to therapy?

I feel like she'd kill the therapist. If anyone asked her how she was feeling she'd explode. Damn, I feel so sorry for her.

Cooking with Sansa

Did you know there was a "GoT" cookbook?
What would people want to cook? Ew.

You've obviously never used it.
Never. I barely cook — I can just about do spaghetti.

The lemon cake recipe — Sansa's favorite — is really popular.
I hate them. And last season I was eating lemon cakes in this one scene and we had to do 10 setups. I counted and I ate just over 50 cakes. Mini ones, but I felt so fat and I hate them. So annoying.

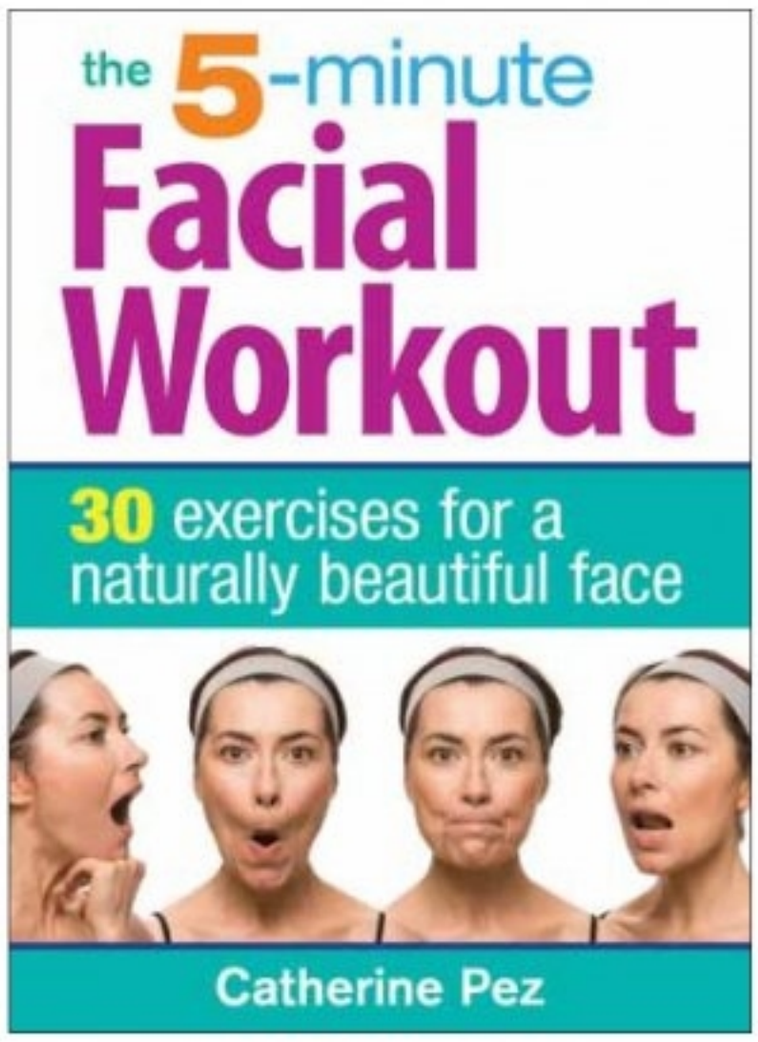
Can exercising your face replace Botox?

Beauty. Catherine Pez, author of "The 5-Minute Facial Workout," believes it can.



It's a big claim: According to Catherine Pez's new book, "The 5-Minute Facial Workout: 30 Exercises for a Naturally Beautiful Face," exercising facial muscles will lift, firm and arrest wrinkles.

"Exercising your face is as healthy for your skin as exercising is for your body," Pez tells us. "Exactly like in the body, muscle contractions improve the firmness of our face."

Pez, 66, teaches facial gymnastics at conferences and workshops. Her exercise routine suggests working the more than 50 facial muscles for five minutes each day. It's designed with men and women in mind.

There aren't any studies proving facial gymnastics' effectiveness, but Pez's homespun wisdom says that, like skin, over time muscle fibers loosen and stretch. Toning the muscles counters sagging and also pumps more oxygenated nutrient-rich blood to withering tissue.

Doctor Marco Harmaty, a plastic surgeon and assistant professor of surgery at Mount Sinai's Icahn School of Medicine, questions the plan's effectiveness.

"It doesn't have any science behind it, so it's hard to make a case for it," he says. "It's counter to the methods of cosmetic surgery and Botox, which is a multibillion-dollar industry worldwide. Stretching out the skin and making muscles stronger and deeper could actually cause skin to wrinkle."

But he isn't opposed to the exercises altogether. "I tried some myself and it relaxes muscles, and makes you more at ease. That instantly gives a more rejuvenated look."

He says the effects are short term, but that "you're possibly increasing blood flow to give a bit of a lift."

"Overall, it's harmless, but wrinkling up your skin probably causes wrinkles," he adds.

Pez claims results are quick.

"Improvement depends on several factors, such as genetics, face shape, age and initial skin state," she says. "We generally see noticeable results after two weeks of exercising the facial muscles at least twice a week."

Exercise 27: The Forehead

Effect

This exercise prevents forehead wrinkles from becoming embedded and relaxes the upper part of the face out to the temples.

Technique

In front of the mirror, your head held level and high, your shoulders relaxed, raise your forehead toward your hairline. Repeat 10 times, in short intervals.

Note

This movement pulls the eyebrows upward. Through force of repetition, you should feel your ears move. Mastering this exercise is not easy, but it is quickly acquired.

Sam Wilson/Falcon (Anthony Mackie) hangs with Steve Rogers (Chris Evans) in "Captain America: The Winter Soldier." / ZADE ROSENTHAL

Captain America 2.
The latest Marvel film is about as watchable and forgettable as the rest.

The interlocking Marvel Cinematic Universe is now nine titles in, and what does it have to show for itself? Is the new "Captain America: The Winter Soldier" all that different from "Thor: The Dark World," much less "Captain America: The First Avenger"? Will you remember which goofy but sometimes hectic romp had the end-of-the-world plot hatched by grim, angry aliens, and which one by Robert Redford?

The "Captain America" wing has a problem the others don't: Captain America is boring. That's not to say Chris Evans, the actor playing him, is dull; especially in round two, he gives Steve Rogers a dry wit that makes him more than an invincible supersoldier who can almost certainly never be stopped. Here he gets a mighty foe: the mysterious Winter Soldier — we can't tell you who it is without spoiling the flick. But the best this baddie can do is be roughly Captain America's equal, meaning our hero is still never really in harm's way.

This time Cap, now firmly in the present, has to fight an agency that's moving — in a bit of hesitant topicality — toward a surveillance state. (Its biggest cheerleader is embodied by Redford, playing oily for the first time since "Indecent Proposal." He's somehow even more charming when issuing threats.) Circumstances orchestrate for our hero to go into hiding, aided by the Black Widow (Scarlett Johansson) and eventually the winged Falcon (Anthony Mackie).

Directors Anthony and Joe Russo are "Community" veterans who, apart from slipping in a Danny Pudi cameo, keep things funny and character-driven. But they're still at the behest of a corporate beast. There's a noisy, cross-cutting, muddled climax that's still passable. But there's also a pair of intense action scenes that put major supporting characters in the line of possible death. The whiff of danger, even one that will never come to fruition, adds enough spice to a series that should have crapped out by now.

Not like a virgin

Sex sequel. Lars Von Trier gets into the dirtier stuff in the second part of "Nymphomaniac."

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Charlotte Gainsbourg has a fun time in "Nymphomaniac: Volume II."
MAGNOLIA PICTURES

Because this is Lars Von Trier, of course the second edition of "Nymphomaniac," his epic sex survey, would be darker and less warm than "Volume I." This is the one that finally takes a massive detour into sadomasochism. But it's still warm, still more or less nonjudgmental about its alleged deprivations and still extremely funny — or as funny as a project by Lars Von Trier can be (which is, to be honest, very).

The funny bits are again mostly due to Stellan Skarsgard, who picks up his role as Seligman, the aging bookworm who rescued sex addict Joe (Charlotte Gainsbourg) after a beating. As ever, he keeps interrupting her bonk-strewn life story with wacky digressions. Still, the film ups the ante by having its hero encounter numbness in her nether regions, then rebound with an addiction to whips and other unpleasantries.

The scenes of Joe/Gainsbourg being beaten aren't "light," but they're not sensational either. Von Trier is doing many things in this massive canvas of a megapicture, and one of them is attempting to normalize transgression. If the sex isn't particularly sexy, it also isn't ugly, in the manner of many art house coitus movies. Von Trier finds a weird tenderness in masochism, even as her perpetrator (Jamie Bell) resists attempts at emotional connection.

"This is a serious film about sex, and about much more than that. But it's also a joke. Von Trier wants you to take it both seriously and with a grain of salt, as the ramblings of a provocateur who sometimes says things only to get a rise.

The film also is part of him working through his own limitations, as an artist and as a person. He's up front about his failings. He wants "Nymphomaniac" to be a feminist work, but he understands that it's feminism coming from a man, and a man often charged with its opposite — with enjoying seeing the suffering of women. It's a two-faced picture, having its cake and eating it too. And it winds up suggesting that the best way to take in a Lars Von Trier film is to never take it too seriously. Then again, let down your guard and you'll get spanked.

Reel tragedy

Filmmaker Rithy Panh recreates his childhood in a Khmer Rouge camp in the documentary "The Missing Picture." / STRAND RELEASING

Documentary.
A filmmaker takes an unusual, striking look at life under the Khmer Rouge.

"The Missing Picture" was nominated for this year's Best Foreign Language Oscar, although it could have easily been nominated in the documentary category. So which is it, documentary or fiction?

The line is blurred, even though it relates filmmaker Rithy Panh's experiences as a child surviving the Khmer Rouge genocide. It joins films like "The Act of Killing," which finds clever ways to get around both a lack of traditional documentary material — footage that may not exist, survivors unwilling or unable to talk, etc. — and certain tropes (talking heads, dry exposition) that have soured into unimaginative cliches.

The scheme dreamt up by Panh — who has repeatedly tackled the subject, as in "S-21: The Khmer Rouge Killing Machine" — is a doozy. Focused entirely on his experiences inside a camp, it's told almost entirely through dioramas populated by coarse clay figures. This is by necessity: The only footage of the incident was taken by Khmer Rouge filmmakers, who used it as propaganda aimed at the outside world.

But it's more than that. The childlike, even faintly comic nature of the figures is a distancing effect, meant to stress horrors by abstracting them into something superficially approachable. It's also meant to recreate one man's nightmarish childhood at the same time it mourns it. This is a filmmaker regressing into his youth to recreate the playtime of a boy robbed of his innocence — of someone who had to learn how to fend off hunger, to get past his parents' deaths, to disappear into his mind.

"The Missing Picture" is among the most harrowing portraits of life among widespread murder and misery, no less because it's so disarmingly calm. It's at times playful, with segues into the Apollo moon landing and the musicians that delighted audiences before the Khmer Rouge took over. Even the nation's untouchable celebrities face the same horrible fate as everyone else.

Panh contributes a poetic narration that concisely ruminates even as it pulls the piece in many fruitful directions. The film can be read in many ways, including as a contemplation on what purpose art like "The Missing Picture" serves. Panh talks about seeing that which no one should see. "But if he sees it, then he should tell everyone."

Hero again

Scarlett Johansson reprises her role as Black Widow in "Captain America: The Winter Soldier." / GETTY IMAGES

Interview. Scarlett Johansson says you should — and shouldn't — look up to her Black Widow character.

"Captain America: The Winter Soldier" is obviously a Captain America (Chris Evans) movie, but just as important is Scarlett Johansson's portrayal of Natasha Romanoff, code name Black Widow. The film marks her third appearance as the sole female Avenger, giving Johansson the chance to inhabit a character in a way she rarely has over the course of her 20-year career.

"It's an interesting challenge to keep coming back to this character," she says. "We saw a little bit of her in 'Avengers,' and we saw a little bit of her backstory — we'll see more of that in 'Avengers 2' — but in this film, we really get to see Natasha as a person who gets up, gets ready for work in the morning, has a life outside out of her job once she's out of the suit. She's a woman and she has her own reality outside of this. Who knows how far that stretches?"

She's also not as clear-cut a good guy as Evans' Captain America. "Natasha is a bit of a reluctant superhero. She doesn't necessarily have this strong, golden moral compass. Let's not forget, she started out her career essentially as a mercenary. I don't know if that makes her role model material," Johansson says, though she does admit those gray areas make the job that much more interesting.

"One of the things that's attractive to me about the character is that she uses her feminine wiles as part of her job, but she doesn't rely on her sexuality or physical appeal to get the job done," she says. "She's extremely smart. She thinks on her feet. She's a leader. And she has a lot of foresight. Those are qualities that I think are wonderful to celebrate for young women.

"And of course, it's really rad for me to have my friends' kids kind of look up to that character, and dress up as her for Halloween, and play with the boys and be rough. I always say, 'The Widow always wins.' And it's true. And that's a nice sentiment."

Hard at work

'Piece of cake'

The stunts can take their toll, though. "I'm going to be in physical therapy for the rest of my life," Johansson jokes. But in all seriousness, she was better prepared for this round of Marvel action than for the previous two. "I'd just come off of doing a Broadway run, which is pretty much the most physically demanding thing you can do. I felt like if anything was going to prepare my stamina, it was that. So everything seemed like a piece of cake after treading the boards for that long. And I think I was in pretty solid shape from that run. And then just maintaining it, [which is] boring. Get up at 5, go to the gym — you know that stuff, that's horrible."

Docudrama. A couple who held up the mafia get their own fun movie in 'Rob the Mob'

Michael Pitt and Nina Arianda play a real-life couple who held up the mafia in "Rob the Mob." / MILLENNIUM ENTERTAINMENT

Considering it's a docudrama about a couple who held up mafia hangouts, "Rob the Mob" is disarmingly goofy. Based on one of those stranger-than-fiction tales that eventually get made into movies like this, it tells of a struggling Queens couple — Tommy (Michael Pitt) and Rosie (Nina Arianda) — who hatch a so-crazy-it-probably-won't-work scheme. It's 1991 and the John Gotti trial is in full swing. After hearing his minions and colleagues never bring guns to the hangouts and bars they frequent, Tommy decides to use an Uzi to steal their cash, rip their chains from their necks and maybe mess up their hair.

Director Raymond De Felitta has a thing for warm-hearted but abrasive New York stories; the farce "City Island" hit up an area of the city so far untouched by the middle class. He does the same for Queens. He pitches the film as a broad comedy, but not the kind you'd think. The characters are cartoonish, but not full-on stereotypes; despite the slicked back hair and gold, this has to be one of the most calm portrayals of New York organized crime on film.

Instead, the characters are clumsy, foolish and, if you ignore the peppy tone, human. Tommy fumbles with his robberies, from the way he tries to handle the gun while also managing the bag of loot, to the way his targets spend most of the robberies stuck in disbelief they're happening at all. De Felitta doesn't even totally hate the mobsters. He periodically cuts to aging mob boss Big Al (Andy Garcia), a salt-and-pepper bearded epicure who likes to rhapsodize about Mortadella while awaiting the jail time that has so far eluded him.

Big Al's scenes aren't important dramatically; he's there for texture, and to ease us from a sillier tone into the melancholic, possibly tragic one on which the movie will end. But the whole of "Rob the Mob" fits De Fellita's sensibility, which is big and warm and welcoming. He hates no one. He's perhaps closest to the boss (Griffin Dunne) who employs Rosie and ex-con Tommy, who says he accepts anyone chucked by society, even a sex offender with a face full of tats. ("Actually, he's a nice guy," he explains). If it occasionally goes too far with its comedy, that's a good thing — the kind of flaw that proves the film is human. MATT PRIGGE

First Friday. Local writer Natalie Hope McDonald turns to canvas to create "visual journal entries."

In much of her professional life, Natalie Hope McDonald is limited by language. As a freelance journalist, she's restricted by word counts, bound by grammatical rules and subject to the seductive powers of clever phrases.

She is also, however, a painter, and the canvas is where she explores some of her own stories.

"The painter Gerhard Richter talked about the impossibility of explaining visual art with words, and that if he could there would be no need for the paintings. He would simply write what he wanted to communicate," says McDonald, who has contributed to this newspaper. "I feel the same way. Both mediums are about storytelling. The written word just leaves a lot less up to interpretation."

Donald's new show, "Invented Surfaces," features abstract, mixed-media paintings created over the past year. Rich in texture, the large-scale pieces explore themes of love and loss, of memory and its trickery. And while words certainly have their limits, scraps of texts — including excerpts from her late mother's notebooks — appear in many of McDonald's pieces, which she refers to as "visual journal entries."

"It's much different — and for me, much more comfortable — interpreting death or a memory abstractly than it is to let it all hang out, so to speak," says McDonald. "While my paintings are a measure of everything from grief to resilience, they also have an entirely different meaning to me than they may to anyone else. I guess in the world of endless status updates and tweets, I like to keep at least a few secrets."

1 Frankford Avenue Arts Corridor. Fishtown's answer to what was traditionally Old City's night includes a ton of shows (and sales and snacks) along Frankford Ave. On our radar: an installation exploring April Fools' Day at Little Baby's Ice Cream; Little Berlin gallery, which is hosting the usually mobile Philadelphia Public History Truck; and Fishtown Tavern, making it all interesting and everyone tolerable with $2 beers.

2 Gravy Studio. Consider this your selfie penance: The portrait show "Friends and Strangers" features new photographs by local artists including Steve Dyer, Taylor Galloway, Stephanie Price and Gianna Vadino. Reception 6-10 p.m., 155 Cecil B. Moore Ave., Gravy-Studio.com

3 Space 1026. "Freak Scene East" features original work and prints from 21 doing-it-their-way comic artists. 6 p.m., 1026 Arch St., Space1026.com

Though Nirvana only put out three proper albums before Kurt Cobain killed himself (20 years ago this Saturday), their impact has echoed in the momentous musical years since his death. But has anything come close to the seismic shift in music that Nirvana brought about?

Oasis and Blur feud and a far less silly East Coast/West Coast rap feud begins.

Foo Fighters, featuring Nirvana's Dave Grohl and Pat Smear, are the biggest band in America.

1997
Radiohead release "OK Computer," which is a good thing, but Creed release "My Own Prison," which is a very bad thing.

1998
Britney Spears releases her "... Baby One More Time" single, opening the doors for her former "Mickey Mouse Club" cast mates like Christina Aguilera and JC Chasez and Justin Timberlake of 'N Sync.

1999
Woodstock '99 is dominated by pissed off rock/rappers like Limp Bizkit and Rage Against the Machine. It turns into a huge, violent mess. By this time, MTV has pretty much stopped airing music videos.

2000
Metallica sues Napster (oh well), boy bands dominate music (whatever) and Eminem releases "The Marshall Mathers LP" (nevermind ... actually, wait, this is good!)

Heidi Klum thinks her shoes have feelings

We spoke to a tanned and suited Heidi Klum on Wednesday as she plugged her new Dr. Scholl's DreamWalk insole line in New York City. After wearing heels for more than 20 years, she told us she was happy to find something that actually makes her comfortable in her up-to-7-inches sky-high shoes. (Whew! There! We let her have her plug.)

We hope Heidi's got boatloads of those insoles, because she has a basement full of shoes. "I've collected some very nice shoes and don't want to get rid of them," she said. "Otherwise, they will get mad!"

Klum / ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Mmhmm. Moving on. Klum told us she's "doing very good" despite a recent breakup with her bodyguard Martin Kristen and her 2012 divorce from her hubby of nearly seven years, Seal.

Her new suitor had better be comfortable dating a tall, leggy model who also wears heels — looks like Klum's not trading her heels for flats anytime soon. LASSE EMIL KRISTIANSEN

Best family vacation ever for Scottish girl

James Franco should give Anthony Weiner a call for advice. The actor was caught red-handed trying to hook up with an underage girl.

It's clear he knew about her jailbait status: Franco sent Lucy Clode, 17, a direct message on Instagram asking, "You're 18?" When she wrote back "nearly 18," he even asked her when her birthday was.

Franco met Clode outside of his play "Of Mice and Men," where she asked him to pose for a selfie with her. She captured a video of him telling her, "You gotta tag me."

She did, and he promptly direct messaged Clode, who is visiting New York from a town called Dollar in Scotland. During the conversation, Franco asks Clode how long she is staying in New York and if she has a boyfriend. It escalates from there.

Franco

In the texts, Franco asks, "Can I see you?"and "You're single?" Most incriminating, he asks her, "Should I rent a room?" Clode shared the texts with a friend who quickly posted them to Reddit. Some are speculating that this is a publicity stunt for Franco's new movie in which he plays an older man seducing an underage teenager. And now the rumors have provided him with the perfect excuse.

And Clode? She's just wrapping up the best family vacation to New York ever. ANDREA PARK

Mann's feelings on the red carpet

Obamacare is positive

Re: 'Americans want care, not highway robbery' (Metro, April 3) The recent letters saying that health insurers make huge profits of 20 percent and are complaining because it's not their usual 30 percent are ridiculous. Their average profit margin is around 4.5 percent, a fact that can easily be looked up online. This is on the low end of the spectrum as far as corporate profits are concerned. As for expanding government insurance such as Medicare (because the government does not have a profit motive like the evil insurance companies), private insurance's administrative costs run about 5 percent less than what it costs the government per enrollee. In short, insurance company profits are not much of a medical cost driver, and those same insurance companies administer claims far more efficiently than the government does. RON SHELTON, VIA EMAIL

Maria Termini's concerns about the U.S. health care system are duly noted, but saying "the ACA is not positive reform" ignores the fact that about 10 million people have access to health care now who did not before the law. She also ignores that the rise of health care costs since the law was passed is at the lowest rate in decades. Don't be fooled into making the perfect the enemy of the good. CHARLES HALL, VIA EMAIL

Papelbon retired just one of eight batters Wednesday. / GETTY IMAGES

The problem with Papelbon

MLB. The Phillies played well enough to sweep the Rangers, but the bullpen failed them.

When breaking down the Phillies during spring training with John Kruk, the ESPN analyst stressed that if key players produced at the plate and as starters, Ryne Sandberg's team has a chance to contend for a playoff berth.

But when the subject turned to what could go wrong, the bullpen came up ad nauseam.

"That could be the Phillies Achilles' heal," Kruk said. "They're young except (Jonathan) Papelbon. It's hard to count on young guys."

It's also difficult to count on Papelbon, who is the Phillies aging closer with deteriorating stuff.

"You hope he can at least pitch as well as he did last year, which wasn't that great," Kruk said. "I don't know what you'll get out of him this year ... the rotation is only as good as the bullpen."

After only three games, that analysis nails the Phillies. A.J. Burnett and Kyle Kendrick tossed gems against the Rangers, who present one of the toughest lineups in baseball.

Burnett and Kendrick each gave up a run after pitching more than six innings but they each needed help from the bullpen late to win games.

The most curious move of the young season occurred during game two when green Mario Hollands made his major league debut in the ninth with the game knotted at 2. The contest didn't stay tied for long as the Rangers came back to win.

"You just don't know with young kids out of the pen," Kruk said. "It's a gamble."

And then there's Papelbon. Ruben Amaro Jr. gambled more than $50 million that a former elite closer on the north side of 30 would dominate at the end of games.

The Phillies handed Papelbon a 3-1 lead in the bottom of the ninth during the rubber game of the series. Papelbon had no command. He fired an 0-2 fastball sternum level at Adrian Beltre, who tomahawked a base hit. It went downhill from there.

Papelbon, who has no out pitch, retired just one of eight hitters and he allowed three runs, including a bases loaded walk, which ended the game.

"I don't like what I see," an NL scout said about Papelbon during spring training. "This could be a really rough year for him. He didn't pitch as well as the numbers indicate (2.92 ERA) last season. He could be a real problem for the Phillies."

Picking up the pen

Phillies insider Mitch Williams thinks Jake Diekman could be the solution to the team's bullpen woes.

- "The guy I think who will be the most dominant reliever for the Phillies is Jake Diekman," MLB analyst Mitch Williams said. "If he gets his hands right, he could be unhittable."
- "Eventually Diekman could close," Williams said. "Once he learns how to throw consistent strikes, he could be a tremendous closer."

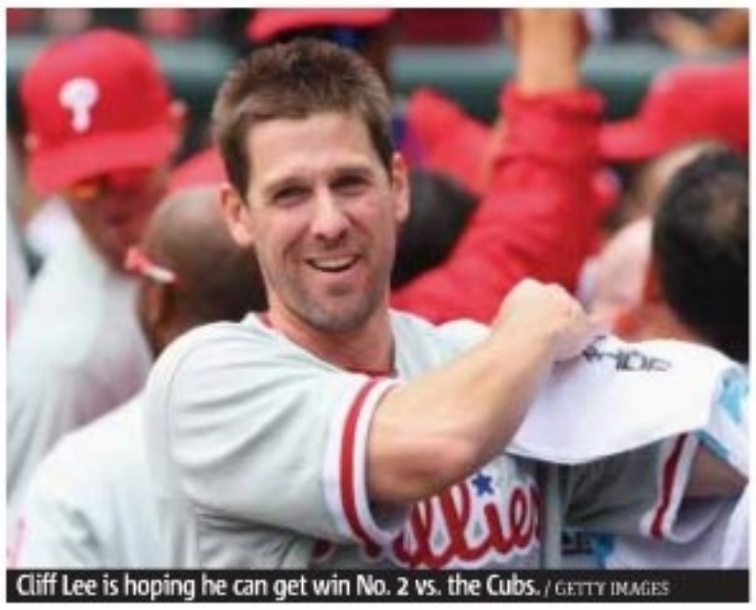
MLB. Phillies can rebound with series at Wrigley against Cubs



Cliff Lee is hoping he can get win No. 2 vs. the Cubs. / GETTY IMAGES

The Phillies are back in action Friday and it's just what the doctor ordered for a team that dropped back-to-back games in walk-off fashion, three games against the lowly Cubs.

It's early, so to assume the Cubs are an easy opponent is probably premature. But after three days against the high-powered offense in Texas, with Prince Fielder, Alex Rios, Adrian Beltre and the rest making things tough for the Phillies pitching staff, Chicago is a nice change of pace.

At Wrigley, Philadelphia will play three afternoon games, all 2:20 starts, and will have much less firepower to contend with.

The Cubs lineup is composed mostly of young unproven talent and some familiar faces from the NL East — Emilio Bonifacio and Justin Ruggiano — in the order.

This should give Phillies ace Cliff Lee the opportunity to settle back to his usual self after being roughed up for eight runs in Arlington on Monday.

Philly also has the advantage of an off day Thursday, as opposed to Chicago, which played 16 innings in a loss against the Pirates Wednesday and had the series finale Thursday. They will have no rest before opening their ballpark for its 98th season. After the three day-games in the Midwest, the Phillies will fly home to prepare to open their park (for its 11th season) against the Brewers Monday afternoon. EVAN MACY

Probable starters

1. Friday: Roberto Hernandez vs. Travis Wood
2. Saturday: Cliff Lee vs. Jeff Samardzija
3. Sunday: A.J. Burnett vs. Carlos Villanueva

Impressive offense

With the bullpen costing the Phillies valuable wins, it's easy to overlook the team's offense, which has been surprisingly potent thus far.

- Marlon Byrd, who hit .385 in Texas, is a revelation in right field. "He's better in right than anybody that they had out there last year," John Kruk said. "And man, can he hit."

Chase Utley / GETTY IMAGES

- After posting terrible spring training numbers, Chase Utley hit a solid .385 in Arlington.
- Ryan Howard had two big hits against left-handers during the Rangers series. The Big Piece homered and drove in three. Howard also struck out seven times. "But that's what you get with Ryan Howard," an NL scout said. "He strikes out a lot but he drives in a lot of runs. It's something you have to live with since few players drive in runs like Howard."
- Cody Asche had no issues with the blinding glare of opening day. The rookie third baseman had a nice series with the bat (a 1.556 OPS) and the glove.

Sixers face Celtics Friday

The day is here, the infamous 4-4-4 tweeted by injured 76ers rookie center Nerlens Noel.

But it looks like the Sixers got their wish and the recovering phenom will wait to make his NBA debut until next season.

The Sixers losing streak began after a win against the Celtics (Jan. 29), and the team hopes to take a 2-1 series lead Friday night. METRO

Sixers still find reasons to play

NBA. Even with all the losses, the 76ers remain dedicated to getting better.

In a season that already contains 59 losses, there is still much to gain for many of the Sixers.

Don't tell them the final seven games are meaningless — not even close.

For players such as Henry Sims, James Nunnally, Hollis Thompson and Casper Ware, among others, it's a final audition. They're not only out to show the Sixers what they can do. It's also an audition for the entire league.

"I'm an undrafted free agent and I don't take anything for granted — nothing," said Sims, who has scored in double figures in six of the past seven games. "I'm out there playing hard every night. I've wanted to be an NBA player my whole life, and I'm going to give it 110 percent every practice, every game. It's the only way I know how to play."

Ware recently inked a 10-day contract and most recently played in Italy.

"It's frustrating to lose," Ware said, "but to make it to the NBA has always been my goal. I don't know what the future holds, but I sure hope it's in this league."

Thompson is one of six rookies on the Sixers and the experience he's gained through the first 75 games is invaluable. He's surely hoping the dream continues next season.

"I feel like my game has improved so much, and I'm thankful to the coaches and how great they've been in working with me," Thompson said. "It's been a crazy season and the losing has been tough, but it's been a great experience in terms of my overall development. I want to play in this league for as long as I can and I'm going to work at it in the offseason to keep my dream alive."

In these final seven games, nothing will change for this group of Sixers. They'll keep playing as hard as possible, hoping and praying it's enough to remain either with the Sixers or within the league.

"I know for me, personally, not being drafted made me work even harder," Sims said. "I think that's something that just pushes me every day. To make it this far has been a great ride. I won't stop working at it ever."

NFL. Jackson has already performed well in Washington

If you can't beat 'em, sign 'em.

That's what the Washington Redskins did with DeSean Jackson this past week to the tune of a reported three-year, $24 million deal.

Jackson had played six career games at FedEx Field as an Eagle, and was largely successful in D.C., having caught 18 balls for 336 yards and three receiving touchdowns. The dynamic Jackson also had a 67-yard touchdown run against the 'Skins in 2010 and the Eagles went 4-2 in Washington when Jackson was wearing green and white.

Jackson's best game in Washington came in last year's Eagles season opener, when he caught seven balls for 104 yards and a touchdown in a 33-27 Philly win. MATT BURKE

One and done

Chung back with Patriots

After being cut by the Eagles back on March 12, Patrick Chung decided "you can go home again." Chung is now returning to New England, the team that he spent the first four years of his career with. The former Oregon star recorded 59 tackles in 10 starts last season, without an interception. METRO

Backup plan

Redskins bring in QB McCoy

The Redskins inked former University of Texas star quarterback Colt McCoy on Thursday, giving Robert Griffin III another notable backup.

McCoy latched on with the San Francisco 49ers last season, attempting just one pass. He had spent the previous three seasons in Cleveland. METRO
